In FASHION now

Fall and early winter are very popular times of the year for weddings. This year's bride will have a wonderful choice of dresses and materials to choose from. The bridal gown's silhouette depends on the bride wearing it, the type wedding she's having, and her budget.

Almost as important as the bridal fashion setup is the bride's bouquet. Something new has been added to this department. Gone will be the windup and then the toss down the stairway. The bouquet is getting lighter in weight and in mood. Most brides these days will want to press their bouquets for their memory books.

Still in favor are the pull-out "going-away" corsages for the bride made of stephanotis, butterfly orchids, Vanda orchids, or lillies of the valley.

Wedding gowns will have a three-D look with satin motifs of folwers or garlands of leaves that stand out in applique on gowns of tulle or net. Many new sari-fabrics are being chosen by brides who want a lighter -than-air look to their gowns.

The newest bridal headdress is the chignon cap of satin and wire in a very sophisticated manner. A shirred chiffon cloche is another way to bring a feminine look to your short clipped boyish hair-do.

The outstanding color seems to be off-white. Delicate ice blue and ice pink are popular and becoming to almost all type colorings. Very light green, called "new green" is coming into the picture. If this color is becoming to the bride, it makes for a beautiful wedding.

IN MEMORIAM

GILLIAM - In loving memory of our daughter, Janie F. Gilliam, who departed this life Nov. 2, 1951.

Four years have passed,
Since our greatest sorrow fell;
The shock we received that day,
We still remember well.

We often sit and think of you,
And the way you died;
That you could not say good-by,
Before you closed your eyes.

Though death may part us for awhile
It never can erase,
The memory of our dear Janie's smile,
Or of our dear one's face.

Often to your grave we wander,
Placing flowers with loving care,
And we feel that you are near us,
As we linger there.
—Sadly missed by: Mother,
Dad and Brother.

Chick Chats

To Cull, or Not To Cull?

It costs three - fourths as much to feed a nonlayer as a bird laying at the rate of 250 eggs annually . . yet the return from the nonlayer is nil. Obviously, it will pay the poultry raiser to take such a bird off his board list.

It isn't hard to tell a loafer from a layer. In the first place, good laying birds fall into "type." They are alert, and active, yet easy to handle.

The laying type boasts a good clear-cut head . . not coarse, nor crow-shaped. She possesses great body depth, loose and pliable skin, and rich pigmentation before starting to lay.

As she gets up production stem, the laying bird loses this pigment . . first, the eye rings, then the beak, and the shanks.

As a final index of laying, observe the vent. If it is large, moist, and bluish, the bird is laying. If it is dry, puckered and yellowish, the bird is a non-layer.

Cull and Sell or Save?

What to do about loafers in the laying flock? That is the question.

You can cull them out, pack them in a crate, and send them to market. But this procedure never returns you the money invested in the birds. It is, however, a sure way of getting something out of them —in other words, not taking a total loss.

There is some feeling nowadays that, having brought a pullet to laying age, the raiser shouldn't give up on her because she doesn't click as a layer.

Check Management

This "save the culls" school of thought advises the raiser to check management factors before committing the bird to the stew pot. Nonlayers may be undernourished or handicapped by disease burden of an unseen nature.

It is advised by those who believe in rehabilitation of the nonlayers that individual cages may help the birds become better-fed and healthier, and hence better producers.

The poultryman must decide for himself whether to cull or not. He should adopt the practice that results in the most net profit from his laying folck.

NEWS FOR VETERANS

Veterans who interrupt their Korean GI Bill training to go back into military service will be permitted to resume their courses after discharge, even though their starting -cut-off date has passed, the Veterans Administration said.

Ordinarily, a veteran who suspends GI training after his cut-off date for more than 12 consecutive months must prove to VA that the supervision over and above the 12-month period was due to reasons beyond his control. Also, he must get VA's prior approval before he may continue his training.

VA has ruled that a training suspension of longer than 12 months, caused by a veteran's return to active military duty, will be considered to have been caused by a reason "beyond his control."

U. S. plans to offer 1,000,000 bales of cotton abroad.
